BAISE, Professor ENALD

Though less frequently mentioned, is just as important as HAUSHOFER / born in Braunschweig in 1833 [sic]; taught at Technische Hochschule in Hanover and Braunschweig and kept Pan-German fanaticism alive there / spent much time in Egypt and Tripolitania; wrote books on Bedouins and on Bagdad railroad; when Nazis seized power, he went on trips to Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Rumania; his friends claimed he made sensational geological discoveries there, but this is doubtful / is clearly working on poison gas now.

BANSE, Professor EWALD

Geopolitician at Brunswick Technical College (see HAUSHOFER) / his work, Space and People in the World War, was translated by British publisher in 1934 / as it set forth Nazi aims quite specifically, including plan for invasion of Britain, it had to be explained away by the Germans as "screwball" / as a result of his book, however, Banse was promoted to Chief of technical section of General Staff.

FATHE, R.

Radio commentator / author of an outstanding book, Der Feldzug der 18 Tage (The Campaign of the 18 Days) in which he describes the tremendous morale force which drove the Germans to victory in the Polish campaign of 1939; most interesting was his revelation of the Nazi's most important slogan: 'One drop of sweat saves ten drops of blood.'; this slogan was intended to spur tired soldiers on to further action, and it was found to work to perfection.
